ABSTRACT

This book contains a collection of articles from "Home Education Magazine" for the years 1984-94. The articles offer views and information on socialization, the selection of curriculum materials, networking, evaluation and accountability, legal considerations, political involvement, higher education, and the location of resources. The book's six parts are organized around the topics of homeschooling (and the rationale for doing it); teaching and learning; teaching reading/writing, math/science, and history/geography/social studies; advanced learning; networking; and personal experiences. Appendices contain author biographies and a list of resources and organizations. (LMI)
